

Submitted To: Mam Mehwish Khan

Submitted By: Syed Muhammad Ali

ID & Sem: 14258 & 6th

Subject: Organizational Behavior

Topic: The Relationship between the Five-factor
Personality Traits of Workers and their Job Satisfaction

The point of this think about was to explore the relationship between five-factor identity characteristics and work fulfillment among specialists of five star hotels inside Alanya area of Antalya province. In line with this reason, the think about was conducted with laborers from all divisions of the hotels included within the ponder test. Amid the consider, a add up to of 471 specialists from 12 five star lodgings in Alanya area of Antalya area were reached. Based on the relationship investigation comes about, a factually noteworthy relationship was recognized between inborn fulfillment and the openness and principles measurements. On the other hand, no measurably noteworthy relationship was watched between outward fulfillment and the five-factor identity characteristics. Moreover, a factually noteworthy relationship was too watched between common work fulfillment and the openness and scruples measurements. Based on the relapse investigation, it was decided that the extraversion measurement had a more noteworthy impact than the openness measurement. The extraversion measurement had a negative impact on outward work fulfillment, whereas the openness measurement had a positive impact. The extraversion and openness measurements had a powerless but measurably critical impact on common work fulfillment. The extraversion measurement had a negative impact on common work fulfillment, whereas the openness measurement had a positive impact.