Q.1) Definition of Architecture.

(1) Architecture is both the process and the product of planning, designing, and constructing buildings or any other structure. Architectural works, in the material form of buildings, are often perceived as cultural symbols and as works of art.

As a social art and as a social artist is our social responsibility to make sure that we are delivering architecture that meets not only functional and creature comfort, but also spiritual comfort. Architecture is just background the beauty of architecture is that it brings people together and can create public constructs. Architecture can do such a thing or decorate the house that may bring the attention of people or of the beauty of the house. Architecture is more than making a statement from the street. It's make an environment for living. Architecture is the most obvious flower of a society culture. Architecture is a strange field where we're constantly asked to demonstrate over and over why design matters, to everyone, all the time. It's exhausting. It is full of romantics who think that even relatively small changes to built environment for a better society. It is the real background of the spirit architecture is not about building but it also improving people's quality of life.

2) Architecture:

The art or practice of designing and constructing buildings.

Architecture; The art and technique of distinguished from the skills associated with construction. The practice of architecture is employed to fulfill both practical and expressive requirements, and thus it serves both utilitarian and aesthetic ends. Although these two ends may be distinguished, they cannot be separated, and the relative weight given to each can vary widely. Because every society - whether highly developed or less so, settled or nomadic has a spatial relationship to the natural world and to other societies.
